

Foreword

As we, the seniors of 1959, review for you the cycle of events of this crowded year we see the three seasons once again spread before us.

The fall session began with 185 enrolled. Crowded class rooms, with all space and equipment in use, was the scene. A six-hour day—with no study halls—was new to the students. A testing and guidance program developed. Additions to the library aided study and gave pleasure to students and the community.

As the year progressed, clubs were organized; bands and vocal groups performed; athletic teams drew their followers; and classes raised money toward their senior trips.

Finally, the spring season rushed the students through baseball, track, examinations, and - GRADUATION.

For these opportunities we are indebted to our community, school board and administration.
