Confidence

"We learned an awful lot this year, and we got along real well, too," stated team member Amy Lytle, when asked about the 1987 volleyball season. This year was a big turnaround for the program. It just seemed as if half-way through the season, everything started to click. Sets were flying higher, bumps were going straighter and soon even the spikes were humming along a little faster, but the most important difference separating this year from any other was the attitude of the girls. Both JV and varsity started out on a dreary note, but after their first wins, a transformation took place. It was evident in every game that all the players were gaining confidence.

They were becoming a team, and a respectable one at that! The most important thing about their change was that they knew they were improving and this helped the quality of their play, immensely. A lot of progress through a lot of hard work was the key to this season. A group of determined ninth through twelfth graders began the 1987 volleyball campaign, and because of their strong friendships and efforts, they finished the season a group of winners!
