

What do a yearbook, an old friend, a box of tissues, and laughter all have in common?

A Moment In Time

Dusting off your yearbook, grabbing a box of tissues for the tears, calling an old school friend, whom you haven't seen in years. Does this make you think of anything? It should. This will describe you in about ten years. Your educational times will be over, you'll have your own career, you may even have a family of your own.

Pictures of black eyes, birthday cakes, and posters might not mean much to you now, but these are moments in your life that you're going to want to remember. So you may stow them away for now but you'll be bringing them all out once more some day.
