

"OPEN UP AND SAY AHH, little froggie." Jeremy Cartwright sticks his probe down the frog's mouth in Mr. Andersen's anatomy class. The class worked on the frogs for three weeks.

HARD AT WORK. Sherry Felton enjoys working on her piece of art. During the first semester, Sherry took one of Mrs. Gearhart's drawing classes.

"It's free education," they tell us, and we usually reply, "So what?" We like to think the teachers give us homework just to torture us. Well, as a senior, it doesn't seem that way anymore. High school education should be treasured. Someday we all move on, but one thing is different: education isn't free anymore, and people don't care as much about our individual needs as the teachers here at Ashley do. High school education is also a gift, because we can still be with our friends and have fun without the worry of not passing a class that we paid good money for. High school is a time to have fun and learn something in the process. A time to be goofy and live life to its fullest.

by Brian Gavenda

LISTENING CLOSELY, Yoko Wantanabe takes it all in as the seniors tell her about their econ class. As a junior, Yoko missed out on field trips to the bank, writing ads, and figuring taxes as part of the class agenda.

