

"Hey, Teacher . . ."

"What are we doing today?"

From the annual activities of the creative writing class's Roast and Toast to the seniors, to the new events like the jazz activity that the junior class experienced in American history, this year has definitely been one of a kind. As Mrs. Karen Martinez stated, "We studied a unit on the cultural history of the United States. The students had to compose Beatnik poems. Beatniks were people who dropped out of society, sat in coffee houses, and listened to jazz while reading their poems."

On the other hand, Mrs. Ruth Seals prepared her vocational English class for their futures by having speakers come in and talk about their careers. Mr. Sherm Hendricks stated, "The worst thing about teaching math is when the younger kids don't pay attention. They don't realize how important their education is." The teachers at AHS usually have quite a few classes to maintain. One of the newest members, Mr. Shawn Feelly, has algebra and computers, to name two.

Whether it's doing fun things like the seniors' Roast and Toast or listening to people discuss possible careers, these teachers make school worth coming to.

CHECKMATE? Matt Miller and Cory Gavenda try to outwit each other in their many chess games. If there's any extra time left after geometry class, the chess board is always busy.
