

"SMILE, MOMMY!" Julian Paksi helps mom, Luella Paksi, celebrate after receiving her diploma. Being a full time mother and student earned Luella great respect among the other students.

"Nervous, us? Heck no . . .

We Are Out Of Here!!!"

A lot of seniors are depressed when graduation rolls around. To them, it means not seeing their friends anymore, or being the childish teens they could get away with being in high school. They're off to college or the armed forces, or to work for a living, forced to live as responsible adults. All of this saddens them. But not these seniors. They took graduation head-on and made it into all it could be.

No one saw sad faces or teary eyes at this year's ceremony. The senior class was so excited and happy, you could just feel the electricity in the air after they received their diplomas. To them, these diplomas were licenses to continue on with their lives. No more principals telling them where to park or teachers breathing down their necks, asking where the homework they hadn't done was. No, these diplomas were keys to further adventures for the Class of 1991.

RED CARPET TREATMENT! Shelly Muscott, and several other of the senior girls, put their money together to rent a limo for after swingout. When the chauffeur arrived, he had a red carpet awaiting them, and even brushed it off, so they wouldn't soil their feet.
