

We Won't Forget These Times!

Yes, all this time is worth it. No matter how much you dread those Monday mornings, or those horrible days when you just want to go home and crawl in a corner, those days pass quickly. When you look on the bright side, there's only one Monday for every seven days when there could be two or three of them in a week. In time, which days do you think you're going to remember the most? Probably the good days, the ones when you got an A on that exam or that composition paper, that winning touchdown, that great grand slam, or that excellent three-pointer in the last seconds of the game . . . instead of those Monday mornings.

If you think about it, the people with whom you spend almost every single minute of every single day for thirteen years are just part of your childhood that leads to maturity and eventually adulthood.

The point is, "All this time is worth the extra effort."

STUDS? Maybe! Jason Kostal and Jonathan Pendleton try to amuse themselves during their lunch period. They think that lunch needs to have a little more excitement, because it's boring.
