Each team member has an important role, just like the pieces of a puzzle . . . without one piece, a spot looks empty. If just one person doesn't give his or her all, the team looks incomplete.

Sometimes we overlook the most important team members, the ones without whom that beautiful shot, that terrific touchdown, or that awesome spike would have never happened. The ones who make it happen are called team players. All they ask for is a high five and a smile, in exchange for that supporting play. Although we usually give the one who made the shot, ran for the touchdown, or made the kill all the glory, we sometimes forget those who make it happen. This kind of team play is something that will never change.
