

Keep the Change

In order to adapt to the times, we have to face many changes that keep the world turning. 1992-1993 was definitely a time for change! Straight hair cut one length and baggy clothes were the "in" thing with teens, and as some moved to the catchy beat of Naughty By Nature, others slowed into the mood of Garth Brooks. Boris Yeltsin made world news and the world became a better place as the Communist Soviet Union disintegrated and a free country rose in its place. The United States made way for a new president and put their faith in Bill Clinton.

Yet, there are some changes that come from within, things that we don't ever want to let go of: being young and full of life, school days, having few cares in the world ... lasting friendships. Eventually, we'll all grow older, graduate from school, take on responsibilities, and grow apart from our friends. But memories will last forever, and we'll always know the feeling of going to a dreaded class, hanging out with the crowd, and above all, feeling young.

As we live each day, let's hold on to those special moments because nothing lasts forever ... except the memories.

JUST DOING WHAT THE TEACHER SAID! Dynean Payne, Jamie Contreras, Tanya Schmidt, Ron Dycus, Erin Polash, and Jason Pendleton follow orders to dance the line in front of a class. Students taking part in a sociology "prejudice" experiment are required to do whatever any of their teachers ask. Erin and Jason decided to join them in an impromptu can-can dance.

HER PERSONAL TROLL. Kristie Spencer rubs Dominic Lowe's bald head in hopes of some good luck. Dominic shaved his head during his basketball season just to be different, and it certainly was unique enough to turn the heads of all who laid eyes on him.
