

SOPHOMORES HIT BIG TIME

Sharing Classes A Real Adventure

In a small school, classes are limited. Sophomores start taking classes with upperclassmen. The tenth graders discovered that there are advantages. "They have more to contribute since they have been around longer," commented David Grolimund. What he found most amusing was when senior Dominic Lowe took a poll in drafting class on whether people folded, rolled, or wadded toilet paper then made a graph of it.

Mrs. Suzanne Lu-neck remarked, "I have a wide variety of students from ninth graders to seniors in my speech class. I think that their working together and getting to know one another is a valuable part of the class."

Tenth grade . . . the year kids really begin to see what being an upper-classman is all about.

"WHAT'S TRUMP?" Mark Crumbaugh, Michael Strmad, Brian Malek, and Steve Strmad all wonder who's got the highest card to win. Playing euchre is one of the hobbies popular during lunch.
