

Upstairs, downstairs, right around the next corner
in the halls, the library, the gym everywhere you turn... people.

It's Monday morning and back to school. Bus riders step off and head for those front doors. Those who live in town and walk, turn off from their street and eventually onto New Street, heading towards school. Usually they end up heading for the front door. Walking in the front door, up the stairs, and turning right leads you to those frantic seventh graders quietly doing last minute homework before the 8:30 a.m. bell rings. Heading into the library you'll find a table full of friends trying to catch up on weekend activities, talking about who went out with who and where.

Freshman Lisa Maier comments, "If you weren't able to go out with your friends, it's a good way to get caught up before the week starts."

Back downstairs and a sharp turn into the old gym, and you will find students of all ages sharing their weekend stories with one another.

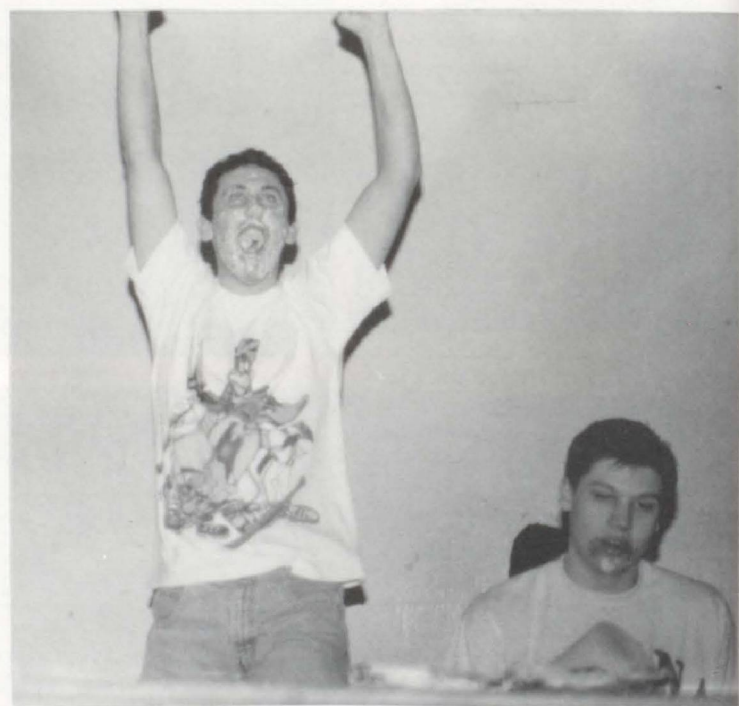

Walking through the halls at any given moment you may spot students rummaging through their lockers trying desperately to locate the assignment that's due first hour. According to junior Jason Sutton, "It's a lousy way to start the week."

Trina Sopocy

J. Morris

MEL'S MARACAS! Sophomore Melissa Bornemann takes a break from playing her flute and demonstrates her rain dance to her fellow band members.

T. Polash

I WON, I'M SICK! Junior Jason Sutton lets everyone know he chowed down his pie to win the pie eating contest. Jason Sutton took first place while Jason Denniston came in third.

SNOWBALL SNUGLERS. Snowball court members Heidi Vanzee and Nick Dolloff share a dance. "Being on court was a lot of fun and I'm sure I'll never forget it," remarked Heidi.

