

At midnight,
early in the morning,
anytime at all

pages keep turning... academics

An English paper, science project, and fifty math problems all due tomorrow? Overwhelmed describes the feeling that comes to many students' minds when they hear the term, "academics." So, how do high schoolers manage to get everything done? They turn things up a notch.

"I always do my homework late at night when I get home from the games. It might be at midnight, but I still do it," said Dianne Surdock.

On top of homework and studying, there are sports practices, ball-games, rehearsals, and other activities. All of this adds up to busy schedules for students. It can also mean doing homework late at night, early in the morning, or in another class.

Students will always have to squeeze in time to get their homework done. How? They turn things up a notch.

Brianna Yelsik

J. Denniston

PLEASE STAY TOGETHER!! English class produces some creativity in David Saylor as he constructs a Shakespearean Globe Theatre. The English 9 class studied Romeo and Juliet for six weeks and ended the unit with a presentation of projects such as models of the theatre, puppet shows and research papers. They then viewed the movie "Romeo and Juliet."

J. Denniston

SMILE FOR THE CAMERA! School administrators Mr. Carl Wayer, principal, and Mr. Larry Ostrander, superintendent, show those pearly whites for the camera. These men make sure classes run smoothly each day and without them there would be havoc around the school.

EWV! WHAT IS THAT? Biology class sparks some mixed feelings as Lisa Maier and PJ McGillis dissect a crayfish. Mr. Steve Larsen, biology instructor, uses the crayfish dissection unit every year and some students enjoy this more than others.