

THE 3-D STOOGES. Kevin Gavenda, Josh Hamick and John Fabus don 3-D from the journalism kit glasses as they mess around on the computers in Mrs. Luneack's room.

S. Bornemann

A. Strouse

ACCESSORIZE. Eric Cordray uses his dress and appearance to express his unique personality.

A FORCE TO RECKON WITH. Tony Miller displays his skill in martial arts. "Martial arts is the key that unlocks many doors," Tony stated.

S. Luneack

HEADBANGING TO THE BEAT OF THE BELLS. Stacie Deming and Jennie Carpenter bring a new style of dancing to some traditional Christmas songs.

T. Polash

Among the student body a few people seem to stand out. They display personalities or tastes that do not favor the norm. This uniqueness separates those individuals from the groups and cliques a majority of students belong to.

Some feel the individuality presented by some students is dangerous and upsets the classroom environment. Others feel those with different ideas and approaches offer a wider view to normally bland topics.

Whether they are encountered inside or outside the classroom, these unique individuals add so much to the lives of those they influence. However, these affects may be positive or negative.

Dave Grollimund

