

working

What is the best way to get a big project done? By working together. And that is just what people do everyday in social studies classes and in the brand new business classes. "I enjoy social studies classes because they aren't just boring book work. In American History we got to have an Indian powwow and do a mock stock exchange from the 1920's," commented Matt Schueller.

And new to Ashley this year are the business classes. With the new classes came the responsibility to run the school store, the Den. "I think the Den was a great idea; it teaches us students how to work together, get the job done, and responsibility" commented Brandie Burgett.

"I like to try to keep classes new and fresh, and group assignments seem to keep students focused," commented Mrs. Karen Martinez, social studies teacher. Derek Dawson summed it up best with, "Sometimes classes get boring, but when I can work with my friends, the boredom turns into fun!"
