eeelin' good

Christmas decorations, shopping, wrapping presents. A little boy thanking Santa in the most appreciatively sincere way, as only a child who still believes in Santa could, ad in a way that almost brings a tear to the eye to know the good that has been done for this family. A very good feeling comes about from this powerful expeience. This is none other than the National Honor Society delivering gifts to its adopted family.

All of the NHS members remember this activity over the rest. "The best part of being in NHS is adopting the family for Christmas. It made me feel really good to do something like that for a family." said Kristen Fabus.

"My favorite part of NHS is delivering presents, because it's great to see the joy on the faces of kids, and to give a family a Christmas that they normally would not have," commented Brandie Burgett.

There are a lot of other activities NHS does that the members really enjoy. "I really like the bowl-a-thon that we have. We are raising money for our adoptive family, and we all get to have lots of fun together," remarked Kristen.

"I enjoy going to Gracie's for our NHS end of the year dinner because we all get to be together, and it's always a good time," stated Brandie.
