As the desks clear and the school stands empty, be sure with all the summer excitement that you always "Give 'em something to talk about."

It's that time again to dust the drudges of winter off your shoulders and step into the light! As the school year closes and students turn in their books and lockers, they look forward to the upcoming summer with enjoyment and fun in mind.

Graduated Senior Jessica McNamara stated, "I just wanna hang out with my friends and relax. Catch a little sun, have a little fun and just party before I go to New York." Whether you plan to fry your butt in the sun, or work it off at a summer job, be sure to call, write, or e-mail those buds to keep in touch. And for those of you who want to put this past school year into over-active memory lapse and plan to live like hermits for your three months off, make sure to at least sit near an open window so you can say you did seek the sun on occasion. Take time out to smell the posies, or go on a vacation somewhere exotic, But remember, whatever you do, "Give 'em something to talk about."
