

a wild gleam in their eyes. Advanced PE has its own horror stories to tell. "Whenever JR. Wright swung the bat, he hit anything but what he was aiming at. . . the ball," said Joe Shaw. Class members sported various bruises for days. Lucas Studt will remember going for a breakaway layup and getting shouldered into the wall by Lyndsay Goward. Ouch!

Want to talk some more about the element of risk? How about the day James "Easy E" Easlick took a last minute half-court shot and swished it? Both James and the rest of the class had all they could do to keep from going into cardiac arrest.

Art, too, has its pitfalls. In the course of completing a variety of creative classroom projects, anything can happen. "When we spray painted our toothpick constructions, some people used two or three different colors and they all ran into each other," remembered seventh grader, Stephanie Beck. Other problems included over-coating chalk drawings with hairspray, causing the colors to run.

Not all creative ventures carry a "Hazardous" warning, however. Projects included "dot" art, doing negative/positive drawings, and making banners representing each student's individuality.

THINGS I LIKE ABOUT PE.

Stephanie Beck: "It's fun to get involved and I just like sports."

Troy Adams: "Actually getting to do something besides sit in class."

Joe Shaw: "I like it when 'Slick' plays."

Lucas Studt: "All we did was play games, no running, just games."

Chelsie Long: "It was a small class and lots of fun."

RENAISSANCE MAN? Commercial Art class students learn calligraphy, how to design a poster using a computer as well as other practical skills. "One of my favorite projects was a poster I created with computer pictures as well as my own calligraphy," said Troy Adams.

LET ME AT 'EM Wild Woman Candy Hodges shows a little of that feminist spirit as she readies herself for a slap shot. The girls in PE often challenged the boys to a hockey match.

EASY DOES IT No shakes for Eric Kirkey as he completes a straight line in Commercial Art. Art classes are a popular choice for most students.
