

"Some of the teachers were really mean, but it was nothing I couldn't handle," commented Lyndsay Goward.

Another place where you get stuck doing things is at a job. To help students prepare for this, business classes are offered. Some of the classes consist of marketing, where the students get to run the school store and come up with new clothing designs; accounting, where students have to balance funds and make withdrawals and deposits; and business law, where students have a mock trial and study laws that involve business.

"Classes like these give students a chance to experience the reality of the business world while they are still in school and haven't made any career choices yet," commented Ms. Michelle Moore.

These students worked really hard at what they did even when they were forced to participate in activities they didn't enjoy. It proved that they could overcome obstacles that might prevent them from achieving their goals later on in their life.

Aaron Schulz

THINGS I LIKE ABOUT SOCIOLOGY.

Rachel Billings:
"Sitting next to Jessica Passmore."

Annette Cermak:
"Learning about all the different cultures."

Wayne McElhaney:
"Having all the different projects."

Heather Jones:
"Discussing the different theories of Sociology."

J. Diffin

DO A LITTLE DANCE Rachel Billings, Annette Cermak, Vikki Turner, Wayne McElhaney, Heather Jones and Stacie Wargo are forced to dance in front of their speech class.

"It was fun being a dolt because everyone was still nice to me," stated Stacie Wargo.

WHY AM I UP HERE? Jason Mora and Cassie Richmond do a project for their Global Studies class. "We were assigned to do a project about poverty and demonstrate it to the class. Jason and I had a lot of facts about the causes of poverty."

J. Diffin

J. Diffin

WHAT WAS THAT AGAIN? James Spencer and Jeremy Owen stand at the front of Mrs. Martinez's room while presenting a poster full of facts for their Global Studies class.